Today's decision, a direct result of the Cyprus crisis, was an-nounced after the military rulers called former political leaders to a meeting and told them to take over the nation's mounting economic and political problems.

The meeting was conducted by President Phaidon Gizikis, one of the military leaders who led the coup here in November against another group of officers. He pledged to keep the military in the background and allow the politicians to govern,

In the Public Eye

When the House Judiclary Committee begins debate today on whether or not to recommend the impeachment of President Nixon to the House of Representatives, li will do so in the public eye-focused by the television cameras. And this innovation—so far as meetings of the committee are concerned, as opposed to hearings-is a good

There is much to be said against recording this kind of discussion, live, on TV. The arguments are likely to be more stilted or theatrical; the kind of give and take, which sometimes helps resolve issues in confidential sessions, will be more difficult to achieve. The temptation to ecore points for effect, to present images rather than ideas, will be greater. The small screen has itself helped shape many great events within its own technical limitations

Nevertheless, it is well that the House has recognized the necessity for exposing this critical debate—one of the most important that any congressional committee has ever engaged in-to the public in full. For impeachment, although conducted within a judicial framework, is essentially a political process; the members of the Judiciary Committee are politically responsible to their constituents and to the nation, and it is important that there be no ambiguities about the etands that they take.

For one thing, much of Watergate already is far too shrouded in ambiguity, in doubts about the law and about the facts. There must be none about the reactions of the committee, which serves as a kind of preliminary grand jury to the full grand jury of the House in preparing-or rejecting-an indictment of the President of the United

As a political process, there can be, has been and will be partisanship in the steps toward impeachment. Those who favor and those who oppose impeachment have been accusing one another of it, and both have been right. But it is the voter who will ultimately judge which side has wronged the nation by its partisanship, and it is the voter who is entitled to know how bis representative in Congress regards the evidence presented to them, whether they consider that it justifies the removal of Richard Nixon from office, and wby.

The disadvantages of an argument in full view of the people do not outweigh the very positive benefits of compelling a group of men who have the obligation to study that evidence in detail, and to draw firm conclusions from it, a group which represents a wide range of geographic and political opinion, to state their opinions in formal, open debate. It may go far to crystallize public opinion generally: ft must provide a basis for judging the jury. And that is an essential part of impeachment, because it carries the case to the final tribunal: the

Cease-Fire in Cyprus

The fragile cease-fire on Cyprus and the projected tripartite negotiations in Geneva are a result of concerted peace-keeping efforts of the whole international community, rather than any one mediator, a fact of capital importance for the future.

Britain advanced the crucial political proposal around which Greek-Turkish agreement finally coalesced, a peace conference of the three guarantors of the 1960 settlement that established an independent Cyprus: Britain, Greece and Turkey. Secretary of State Kissinger and Under Secretary Sisco evidently played the key role in bringing about an early cease-fire, probably sooner than wanted by the Turks, who were eagerly pushing ahead to establish their military position on the Island.

As Mr. Klasinger noted, the combined pressure of all the NATO countries on their Greek and Turkish allies has contributed heavily to dampening down this war. The Common Market, which Greece and Turkey hope to enter, exercised parallel pressure through the French chairman of its foreign ministers council.

The UN, which has troops on the island, brought to bear through the Security Council not only the pressure of world opinion generally but the evidence of Soviet-American agreement on the essential measures needed to terminate the fighting and restore stability. That agreement was important not because Moscow had a large role to play in halting the fighting, but because the danger, however slight, of Soviet obstruction or intervention had to be avoided. The neutralism of Archbishop Makarios and his tactical alliance with the Greek Cypriot Communists have given the Soviet Union 2 political stake in an independent Cyprus.

The immediate problem now is to make the cease-fire stick. Serious violations undoubtedly are occurring, with most of the fighting reportedly between Greek and Turkish Cypriots rather than the regular Greek and Turkish forces. The UN force will have a critical function in rectoring the calm that is essential for the peace talks.

The Geneva talks will undoubtedly proceed slowly, especially if they are to explore the basis for a new constitutional order in Cyprus, as demanded by Turkey, rather than a return to the 1960 settlement or the muchaltered version of it that developed under Archbishop Makarios's presidency in the mid-1960s. The fact is that a real settlement has never been achieved. The island has been in a state of de facto partition for 14 years. The last series of Greek-Turkish Cypriot talks on a political settlement had been under way six years without results when the Greek-officered Cypriot National Guard forced the archbishop into exile.

* * * That means that the first order of business in Geneva must be to establish an interim political settlement among Greek Cypriots.

If Precident Makarios's early return cannot be quickly agreed upon, his heir apparent, speaker of the House of Representatives Giafkos Cierides, is one of several leadere who would be acceptable to most factions as acting Precident pending a negotiated eettlement and new elections. Cypriots themselves must determine their own future. but the mediating role of the tripartite conference in Geneva will be the essential key. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Indispensable Laotian

Only in tiny Laos has the fighting halted and political reconciliation begun under a three-month-old coalition government in which the Communist-oriented Pathet Lao and the leaders of the former Vientiane regime share power equally. That fragile success is now endangered by the illness of Prince Souvanna Phouma, the 72-year-old neutralist Premier who brought the settlement about and whose sudden heart attack has removed, if only temporarily, the one man of stature trusted by both sides.

Militarily, the country remains divided along the cease-fire lines, with the Communists in control of two-thirds of the territory and one-third of the population of 3.1 million, mostly minority hill tribes, while the bulk of the Lao population remains under the Royal Laotian Army's wing. Full Teunification awaits new elections, which neither side seems anxious to hasten. American and Thai troops have left the country; the North Vietnamese forces, supposed to be out by June 4, have yet to depart but remain quietly in the background.

With a long period of peace and stability and avoidance of a Vietnam war, of which Laos was always an appendage, the two Laotian parties might work out a lasting accommodation that Hanol might acceptunder pressure from Moscow, Peking, Washington. Paris and London, which all seem to favor the present settlement.

Prince Souvanna Phouma is the indispensable man who alone is believed able both to hold the coalition government together-and to make it work. The two deputy premiere, one from each elde, may be able to preside alternately over the coalition cabinet for a sbort period and keep the country going. But, unless the Premier makes a rapid recovery, Laos will soon be headed into the unknown. With no successor in sight who could command the support of both sides, a struggle for power, endangering the settlement, would be hard to avoid.

Some Questions on the Impeachment Issue

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON—Rep. Charles E. Wiggins, R-Calif., the exceptionally gifted lawyer who has emerged as President Nixon's most effective defender on the House Judiciary Committee, was rehearing some of his arguments one day last week with a group of reporters who had interrupted his newspaper reading in the Speaker's lobby off the floor of the House.

One of the points be made went right to the heart of the issue that the committee, the Congress and the nation must judge this week, as the public impeachment debate begins, The conversation bad proceeded for some time, with the Californian calmly rebutting each of the major charges against Mr, Nxon when a reporter asked Wiggins if he were not somewhat troubled by the overall pattern of ethical practice represented by the Nixon presidency, "Is that what you'd teach your children?" be was asked

The Issue

That, said Wiggins firmly, is precisely what is not-and should not be-at issue in the impeachment proceeding, "The Constitu-tion set a standard," he said, "when it directed that the President could be impeached and removed from office only for treason, bribery or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

Voters can-and should-set higher standards when they choose between presidential canat election time. said. Congress may-and probably should—legislate a higher standard of behavior by tightening the campaign practices, conflict-of-interest and campaign finance laws. "But," he said. "Congress may not write a new standard at this time and then use it retroactively to measure the Nixon administration in a way no prevous administration has been measured."

What Wiggins was saying, in effect, was that those defending the President against impeachment do not beve to prove that be was wise, discreet, prudent or in any way edmirable in his exercise of the powers of his office. All they have to do is show that he was not guilty of "treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors." The notion that Mr. Nixon should not be judged by a higher standard than the Constitution lays down, or that past presidents were expected to meet, is so fairminded on its face so much in keeping with the basic American belief that you don't change rules in the middle of the game—that It is likely to be the mainstay of

But it is also true that whatever judgment is made on Mr. Nixon will become the standard by which future presidents are guided, and this is something equally important to keep in the Nixon defense.

Any kind of action that Congress sanctions on Mr. Nixon's part will be considered legitimate by his successors in office-who will, of a certainty, wish to employ the full powers of that office to cope with the crises of their days. Any kind of action for which Mr. Nixon is impeached will be avoided by later presidents. This is, in short, a time when it is both essential and proper to define, in contemporary circumstances, the meaning of that phrase "high crimes and misdemeanors," not just to see that Mr. Nixon is judged fairly but that his successors are guided

To do so is not to violate the Constitution, but to carry out the exact intent of its framers. In the House Judiciary Committee's little handbook, "Constitutional Grounds for Presidential Impeachment," published last February, and in the new paperback, "Impeachment," by Charles L. Black jr. of the Yale Law School, the point is made repeatedly that phrase "high crimes and misdemeanors" was chosen in order to protect constitutional government against gross abuse of power in whatever ways were seen as dangerous by contemporary legislators.

That is what the language meant when it first appeared in 1386, in the impeachment of the Earl of Suffolk, a royal chancellor, for failing to keep his promises to Parliament or to carry out its ordinances. And that is what it meant to

Andrew Hamilton, who said that impeachable conduct was "abuse or violation of some public trust" that brings "injuries . . . immediately to the society itself."

It is because of that long history that Prof. Black can conclude, with some confidence, that the three tests of an impeachable offense are that it must be "extremely serious," that it must tend to "corrupt or subvert the political and governmental process," and that it must be "plainly wrong in itself to a person of honor, or to a good citizen, regardless of words on the statute books."

No such catalogue of allegations has ever been made against a previous president as now stands against Mr. Nixon, those charged against President Andrew

Johnson were of a very different, and simpler, character. But we cannot prove the negative proposition that no such case could ever have been constructed against a previous president Rather than pursue that futile debate, we can ask ourselves the more important question: Are these actions the kind we are willing to accept from future presidents? For the judgme Mr. Nixon will set "the floor" on the behavior we can expect from his successors

The question for Congress and the country is whether the use of the presidential office detailed in the voluminous evidence now assembled is a sixudard of behavior we can condone as a precedent for future occupants of that office, or whether it fundamentally corrupts the political and governmental proce

We will not go wrong if we make the test, and our answer will give us the kind of government-and country-we deserve not just for the next two years but for the foreseable future. C The Washington Post.

among Frenchmen. In this distant oil treasury, where a monarchic government is just emerging from an astonishingly strict and puritanical feudalism based upon fundamentalist interpretation of Islam's scrip-tures, Watergate is seen as something wholly different. Together with what is regarded as a conspiracy to oust Henry Kissinger from the State Department, it is interpreted as a deliberate plot. This, one hears, was conceived and managed by Soviet Communism and Israel Zionism. Why? To wreck a U.S. government that is genuinely eeeking Middle East peace by forcing the Israelis to shandon all territory acquired since the outbreak of the six-day war in 1967 and to acknowledge the rights of Palestinian Arabs.

Of course, to Americans, the whole idea seems ludicrous. It is considered absurd enough that anyone should conceive of Communism and Zionism as allies mers the latter and the Soviet TAIF, Saudi Arabia.—Explaining and Israeli governments obviously detest each other. That the two should join in trying to overthrow within, linking Nixon and Kissinger and eviscerating both transcends ridicule in the land where Watergate reigns supreme.

Firmly Believed

But this doesn't alter the fact that this is firmly believed here, starting with King Faisal himself, as that sovereign made clear to me in a lengthy background conversation at his summer palace. Moreover, the King has stressed these views in talks with other visitors, including the exceptionally able American ambassador. James E. Akins, and it is echoed by many important Saudi Arabian

Their conception can be summarized accordingly. Soviet in-fluence—which is detested in this country, the seat of Mecca, and have intruded into the Arab world save for Zionist creation of Israel. But (secording to this theory) the two movements have really been working together. The Soviet Union was not in the least pro-Arab but simply used Israel as a device to inflitrate the Middle East. It allegedly sponsored creation of a Zionist state knowing America would back it and lose its Arab friends to MOSCOW.

Once Washington caught -and really began to work for peace by pressuring Israel—the Communists and Zionists decided to weaken the United States by Isbeling Nixon and Kissinger as "traitors." That is the meaning of Watergate and the anti-Kissinger cabal, as seen through this slanted optic.

Faisal and his ministers had become persuaded that Nixon and adding that he was surr was impossible to squeeze Soviet influence from the Arab lands without peace, and that peace could only be arranged on the terms outlined above. For Paisal, the point of primordial interest in any settlement formula is Jerusalem with its Moslem sacred pieces. He clearly wants the old city, controlled by Jordan until 1967, back in Arab hands. Yet there is no doubt he has considerably modified his earlier views, accepting Israel's reality within more - confined borders. His policy today is less obdurate than when he formerly hisisted on an all-Arab Jerusalem (meaning the entire city) and a virtual end to Israel's existence.

Religious Ferror

Undoubtedly there is more religious fervor to Saudi Arabia's approach to this sensitive and explosive problem than in the case of any other Moslem country. Islam plays a crucial political

But to minimize the threat of additional cases developing among Americans this year, health workers have issued insecticide to residents in areas where plague bacteria have been detected in recent weeks.

Is Reported by China HONG KONG, July 23 (Reuters).—China reaped a good har-test of wheat this summer despite serious droughts last winter and spring, the New Chine News agency reported today.

The agency said the total harrest rose by "a big margin" over that of last summer, and the wheat output in six Chinese provinces was said to be a record. Wheat is China's major summer crop with a sown screage second only to rice paddies.

U.S. Aides Said to Pressure Seoul Over Political Trials

By Fox Butterfield

SEOUL, July 23 (NYT).—U.S. officials here are privately indicating their concern to South Koreans over the possible effect of a wave of political trials on continued U.S. support.

Publicly and officially: the U.S. Embassy has done nothing to criticize President Chung Hee Park's repressive emergency decrees and a continuing series of secret courts-martial in which nearly 100 Korean dissidents and critics of the government, some of them. prominent figures, have been convicted.

Forthcoming congressional hearings in Washington, called by two subcommittees of the House Foreign Affairs Committee for July 30, will consider a foreign-aid bill amendment to ban U.S. assistance to any nation holding political prisoners. Although the hearings are expected to focus largely on South Kores, no word about them has appeared in the controlled South Korean press.

Givenchy's Made-to-Order Clothes-For Chic Money

By Eugenia Sheppard

PARIS, July 23.—Givenchy's new fon chemises with sheer, fullymade-to-order collection is for the chic money. The ciothes are almost impossible to dilute for the masses and they are sexy but still ladvlike. It's an unbeatable combination.

Givenchy has picked the most precious fabrics and then gone right on gilding the lily.

His sporty suede coats and jackets are embroidered in braid -like Moroccan and Spanish shirts. Some of his slik organdy evening gowns-like the peach color one-are shaped through the body with masses of teads in the same color. Many of the soft, brocaded satins and the crepe de chine gowns drip yards of silk fringe and so do the dyed Persian lamb coats. The chiffons that run the gamut of pale to dark in a single color are outlined in ostrich in exactly the same

One of the most beautiful dresses in the collection looks as simple as an apron. It's the smoky violet chiffon with a wraparound skirt, cap sleeves, actually covered-up but looking unbellevably naked.

On the copyable side of the collection is the raincoat with the belted front and the big back gathered to a shoulder yoke that appears on most of Givenchy's coats and suit tackets. It is worn nver a brown cotton velvet daytime dress. The cotton velvet daytime dress is one of Givenchy's theme songs this time and he shows it both belted and as a

His lengths are the shortest in Paris, which should make bim popular with all the women who dislike change. Even so they are longer than last year, with the ankle and full-length evening dress about equally important,

Much of the Paris fashion world is in black this time, but Glvencby has never shown more color. For the daytime it's the rusty to the ruby red shades. For evening Givenchy likes pale mauve to deep purple, to say nothing of all shades of blue. green and yellow. Velyets from daytime cotton to the silk that makes cocktail and fur-trimmed evening suits come in what used to be called the jewel colors.

Besides suedes and leathers for daytime, Givenchy likes colorful. British looking tweeds. His suit silhouette is the belted over-blouse over a mid-calf skirt, but in Givenchy's bands it becomes much less Russian and more elegant. Accessories are caps, long scarves and boots

Among the spectaculars, the printed mousselines smocked through the middle and all the fringed furs and dresses. For some of the most glamorous clothes. Alexandre borrowed an old Hollywood trick and sprayed the model's hair with gold.

Patou has one of the youngest nesigners in Paris, Angelo Tallazzi. 32. His big story is the return of the off-shoulder ballgown, worn by the Empress Eugenie and her ladies in the Winterhalter portraits, Tarlazzi does several versions of the three to five-tiered skirt, and in fabrics from flowered chiffon to black silk organdy edged with lace.

Like most of the Paris collections. Patou features lots of velvet, including cotton velvet daytime coats with fur collar and cuffs, like the ruby red one of a silk shirt and Irish tweed skirt. He has a goodlooking rain-cost made of a silk and cashmere mixture and shown over pants and a jacket.

Naturally his version of the ever present Paris suit is a young one, plaid wool with a shorter jacket and a bouncy ski skirt with two deep pockets.

The new Chanel collection is far better than last season's and probably the best since Mademoiselle died. There are minor changes, like a closer fit for the jackets and fuller skirts but it is certainly as close as anyone can come to the original look.

The tweeds are, for the most part, more elegant than tweedy. Especially attractive are the many nff-white suits and the cream and ivory check suits. In

This is how critics for The New York Times rate new films:

"My Name is Nobody" is a very eutertaining Western, that only an immensely appreclative aud witty Italian filmmaker could make, says Vincent Canby. A Sergio Leone presentation, this Italian-French-German coproduction stars Henry Fonda and Terence Hill Directed by Tonino Valerii it was photographed in New Mexico, Colorado and Spain. Says Canby: "The time is 1899, when Jack Beaurezard (Fonda), the fastest gun still alive, is making his way towards New Orleans and a one-way passage to Europe. where, he assumes, no one will try to pick a fight with him. En route to New Orleans, he meets a mysterious young man who says he is Nobody (Hill), whose skills with a gun match his own and who doesn't want to see the great Jack Beauregard fade quietly into JEW YORK, July 23 (IHT) - taste of many Americans," "My Name is Nobody", Canby says, is filled with tumultuous, "beautifully choreographed action sequences that are so bloodless they seem to be slapstick."

> "The Education of Sonny Carson" was produced by Irwin Yablans, who, says Lawrence Van Gelder, "wanted a film about the black experience. What he achieved derives its awesome force from what it insists on saying about the American experience." Based on the autobiographical account of the early years of Robert C. (Sonny) Carson, a black activist now under indictment for murder, the movie (filmed on location in the black slums of Brooklyn), is a work easy to fault, says Van Gelder. "Episodic to the verge of incoherence, directed by Michael Campus with an eclecticism that bespeaks craftsmanship but not control, burdened with uneven portrayals and a star act, it would seem a film beyond redemption." But, adris Van Gelder, while the film fails as biography, it possesses a very real and clutch type alligator bag.

"The Mad Adventures of Rabbi" Jccob," a French film directed by Gérard Oury (co-author of the screenolay) stars Louis de Funes. It's because of them that the film s so funny so much of the time. says Vincent Canby. De Funés plays a "furiously prejudiced bourgeois businessman for whom life is almost insupportable because the world isn't inhabited exclusively by white French-Catholics." Canby praises the supporting actors, including Suzy

"Golden Needles" is the "latest variant of the karate school of adventure in which continuous, muscular, gory action substitutes for logic," says A. H. Weller. In it a clutch of good and bad guys and dolls fight over an alleged Sung dynasty gold statuette. Involved in the chase are the indestructible Joe Don Baker and

Elizabeth Ashley as American fortune hunters trying to grab the statuette from assorted Oriental villains in Hong Kong. Burgess Meredith plays a weird Callfornie millionaire Robert Clouse directed. "The White Dawn," an adaption of James Honston's novel, is reportedly based on a true story about three New England fishermen who, in the spring of 1896, became separated from their ship while on an Arctic whale hunt and whose lives were subsequently saved by a small tribe of Eakimos on Baffin Island. Says Vincent Canby: "The movie is earnest, cold and apparently authentic." It was filmed on Baffin Island, under the direction of Philip Kaufman (The Great Northfield, Minnesota, Raid'), with Warren Oates, Timothy Bottoms and Lou Gossett playing the marooned sailors, and with Eskimos playing Eskimos. "Aside from the exotic beauty of its landscapes, the film offers no comparable pleasures and not even much information. It's the story of how the three sailors have the bad judgment to be so rude and boorish to their hosts that they invite a fate they

TEL AVIV (IRT).—Arnold Schoenberg, like Moses, about whom he composed his last major work and with whom he strongly identified, never resched the promised land of Israel. At the beginning of the 1920s Schoenberg had converted to Protestantism, but the Nazi accession to power in Germany impelled him to revert to the faith of his fathers. On April 20, 1951, after Israel's Academy of Music had made him honorary president, Schoenberg wrote from Los Angeles: "I have already declared for more than four decades that my dearest wish has been to see the establishment of a separate independent state of Israel. And indeed more than that: to become a citizen of that state and to reside there." He died that year before his wish could come

Zubin Mehta, the Israel Phil-harmonic's musical adviser, conducted, assisted with varying degrees of ability by five solo singers and three choirs massed together. Mehta has the musical arrogance to get the last drop of essence out of this astonishing score and he had the courage to apply an impressively somber tempo to the funeral merch which closes the Wood-Dove's lament. In the matter of the componer's musical punctuation marks in the score, Mehta all too often chose to ignore the great composer's ideas in preference to his own. He also at times, in relatively uncomplicated passages, proved in-capable of getting his men to Jessye Norman proved a really superb Tove, with some soaring pianissimo passages, and Rose Wagemann sang movingly as the Wood-Dove. Shell Reports Nuclear Losses

The Royal Dutch-Shell group's cumulative es on nuclear development may have reached £96 million as of the end of the second quarter. The group says it is setting aside an additional £52 million in its second-quarter accounts. At March 31 the set aside was £44 million. Royal Dutch-Shell says losses on nuclear contracts had been anticipated in view of the development nature of the business, but it has become neces-sary in view of the cost increases to re-examine the terms of the contracts. The group says one of its members is a joint partner with Gulf Oil Corp. in General Atomic Co., which is engaged in the design and supply of high-temperature. gas-cooled reactors, advanced nuclear reactors for power stations, and associated fuels.

World Shortage of Raw Metal Ruled Out

By Sara Hansard

WASHINGTON, July 23 (IHT). -There is little denger of a worldwide shortage of basic nonferrous raw materials needed for industry, an economist told a Senate-House joint economic subcommittee vesterday.

James Burrows, vice-president of the Charles Rivers Associates research firm in Cambridge, Mass, told the subcommittee on economic growth that known refillion by 1980."
While the OECD cautions that serves of crucial nonferrous materials such as bauxite should not run out in the "foreseeable -the figures are intended to give

He contended that reportedly dwindling reserves should be dis-counted because there are more underground metals and minerals than are yet known about, Mr. Burrows also said that even if the reserves are depleted, which he claimed would not be until at least the next century for some materials, advanced technology would make it possible to extract lower-quality materials in greater amounts than now is being done. The subcommittee is studying recent price increases of raw materials and the possibility of producer-nation cartels taking over supplies of materials such as oil, banxite, tin and copper. Carl Sears, a staff member of the Joint Economic Committee. cited Jamaica's recent tax increase on exported bauxite which drove the price from $2 to $12 a ton as an example of such Brokers said the market opened on a rising note, continuing 2 surge at the close of yesterday's session. They said speculation that the Federal Reserve has eased its interest rate controls decline in interest pressures aided the rise.

Early in the session the market received a boost, brokers said, when Consolidated Edison Co. reported it voted to pay a cash dividend this quarter after omit-ting one the previous quarter.

A second bounce occurred in early afternoon when Pirst Pacific Bank of Los Angeles cut its prime rate to 10 3/4 per cent from the prevailing 12 per cent level. New York bankers, however, said the cut was not justi-fied at this time. The market then began to ease until the close. Con Ed, a volume leader, rose

Franklin N.Y. Discusses Sale Of Some Assets to Top Banks

In an attempt to raise cash to reduce buge borrowings from the Federal Reserve System, Franklin National Bank officials met privately in Chicago yesterday with representatives of many of the nation's top commercial banks to talk about selling large chunks of the bank's foreign loan portfolio, AP-Dow Jones has learned. Sitting in on the meeting were observers" from the Treasury Department

Surcharge Voted By Toronto Mart

TORONTO, July 23 (AP-DJ). -Members of the Toronto Stock Exchange voted yesterday by a substantial majority in favor of imposing a temporary surcharge on large-size stock orders.

Last week, the Ontario Securities Commission, which regulates stock commissions in the province, scheduled a public hearing Aug. 7 to decide whether a surcharge is in the public interest. In Montreal, Montreal Stock Exchange members voted 56 to five io favor of implementing a proposed surcharge of 17 1'2 per cent on commission rates for orders over $20,000. The exchange said a date for implementation of the surcharge will be established after the proposal has been submitted to the appropriate securities commission in order that it become effective nationally on the same day.

but sources said that the bank is trying to sell "as much as pos-sible" of its foreign loan portfolio. The sources said the meeting produced no concrete agreements, but some participants are agree-able to purchasing some of the loans. One major Midwest bank commented. "Our guy says it looks do-able" and said the quality of the Franklin loans "is good."

Franklin is known to have borrowed more than $1.2 billion from the Fed since mid-May, when news of its financial woes first surfaced publicly. In Washington, a spokesman for the Comptroller of the Currency stressed that it was Franklin that initiated the private meeting and "there was routine talk about syndication of loans." He labeled it as a "non-crists meeting" attended by "the vicepresidents of various banks plus some officers of Franklin and some observers from the Treasury Department," The comptroller himself did not attend, the spokesman said. Franklin officials have not disclosed the exact size of the bank's overseas portfolio, but it is understeod from banking sources that it is more than $500 million.

Franklin had a first-half net loss of about $80 million, according to figures issued yesterday in the first published balance sheet since the bank's troubles became known.

The balance sheet showed that the bank's retained earnings had deteriorated $84.1 million since the end of 1973. As of June 30, the account was in deficit by about $14.3 million.

TWILIGHT OF THE GODS The Music of the Beatles By Wilfrid Mellers. A Richard Scaver Book Viking. 215 pp. Illustrated. $7.95.

Reviewed by John Rockwell

When it comes to writing will the his erakantive, inter about rock 'p' roll, Wilfrid tive notions of a song specific Mellers is not exactly your basic boogier. His prose runs more like this: "The second strain of Paul McCartney's Things We Said Today hints at the possibility of loss, with a weeping chromatic descent in triplet rhythm and with rapid but dreamy tonal movement flowing from B flat by the way of a rich dominant ninth to E flat: the .ubdominant triad of which then serves as a kind of Neapolitan cadence drooping back (without the linking dominant) to the grave pentatonic G

This is one feels it necessary to insist, hastily—not a joke. Prof. Mellers, a professor of music at the University of York, England, has written intelligently about music of many kinds, including one of the very best (al-though slightly dated now) histories of American serious and popular music, "Music in 2 New Found Land." He even has a sense of ironic humor and he knows that lots of people will make fun of his Beatles book including, no doubt, the four Beatles (or ex-Beatles) them-

Why does he write this way? Well, first of all, he does not, always. As the title might imply, Prof. Mellers sets the Beatles into a deliberately legendary, mythical context, one part McLuhan to one part Jung and Wagner (the title is more suggestive than accurate, actually, since Prof. Mellers thinks of his subjects as eternal innocents rather than as world-weary exemplers of a declining order, as in Wagner's music drama to which he refers. Prof. Mellers hears Beatle music as reborn tribal primitivism. -not necessarily inferior to Western art music (although he is a bit ambivalent on that) and answering to the needs of a new generation of global vil-lagers (to use his nonmusical terminology). But the core of his bock is an album-by-album, songhy-song analysis of the Beatle ceuvre (including post-breakup solo efforts), keyed to the notion of "a tieup between the widening range of the Beatles' experience and the expansion of their technical resources."

The premise behind it all is that "descriptive accounts of music cannot be valid inless they are based on what happens in musical terms." And the unthat the musical terms are essentially those of the tonal period of Western art music.

But that leads to two problems, First, nobody but musical technocrats can really hope to understand what he is talking about. Prof. Hellers says that "any reader who is prepared to devote a little time to the glossary should be able to read the book," but he is kidding himself. Every once in a while he

Both sides have an 11-card fit and a nine-card fit. In general it is true that a partnership wants as many trumps as pos-sible, but this deal is an oddity. In the nine-card fit, either East-West or North-South can make all 13 tricks against the wrong opening lead. But if they play in their normal 11-card fit, they have no chance for more than 12.

First consider South's prospects in spaces. If a club is led, the defense can take two tricks. With any other lead, South can draw trumps, discard a club loser on dummy's fifth diamond and make 12 tricks.

Suppose that North plays in seven dismonds. With all the cards in view, one can see that the best opening lead would be a space, giving the defense four tricks with a spade ruff, a club to the ace, another space ruff and a second club trick. A high club lead by East can bring about the same result with more diftienliy.

But suppose that East makes the error of leading the heart ace against seven diamonds. Now North can mill in the South hand draw trumps and claim his contract. He makes five trump tricks, one ruff and seven spade tricks . .

Similarly if East-West plays in hearts, as one would expect, they must make exactly 12 tricks. But in clubs their fate depends on the defense. Against a black-suit. lead, they make all 13 tricks by ruifing and drawing trumps. But

In the diagramed auction, East-West pair made a viços attempt to play in clubs insort hearts. West underbid hand cunningly, knowing that bidding would continue victously. He raised his party hearts just once, with six-tapport, and raised clubs t with only four cards. Unfortunately this device

Intrepid Sails Impressively In Victory Over Courageous

By William N. Wallace

NEWPORT, R.I., July 28 (NYT). Intrepld achieved her most significant victory of the summer yesterday as Courageous suffered her most damaging defeat in their America's cup trial race.

Intropid won by I minute over the long course on Rhode Island Sound under ideal sailing conditions. This was not only a true race but also an exciting one that lasted almost four hours. Both yachts tacked 105 times without making a mistake.

With the second of three sets of trials to select the Cup defender scheduled to end tomorrow, Intrepid now leads Courageoce in their natch-race dueling, five to four. The two will go at it again tomorrow for the last time until the final trials begin on Aug. 15.

What made this race more important than the preceding eight was partly the course. The standard six-legged America's Cup course of 243 miles was used for the first time this summer. It is the same course over which the Cup races are to be sailed in September. The wind was 10 to 12 knots shifting slightly from south to southwest but the same for both.

On the three legs sailed upwind, Intrepid, as has been her styla through a seven-year history that includes two successful defenses of the "old mug," was invincible. Over the 135 miles to windward she gained steadily but slowly on the new Courseous for an advantage totaling 2 minutes 17 sec-again proved faster, but could gain only 1 mmute 17 seconds. Since 60 per cent of Cup racing on the 24.3 mile-course is sailed to windward, the advantage displayed by Intrepid will be most important to the New York Yacht Club Committee in charge of choosing a defender. Damaging to Courageous was her continued inability to keep up with Intrepid

Slugger Not Offered Job

By Dave Anderson

PITTSBURGH, July 23 (NYT). At yesterday's assembly of dugout intellects for tonight's All-Star Game, the National League genius, Yogi Berra, named Henry Agron as the third hitter in his batting order but declined to specify which outfield position the man with 725 home runs would

"I want to see what Hank says," Yogi explained.

"Can you give us an either "Right or left," the New York Meta' manager said.

After the laughter, Yogi added with a smile, "Maybe hell play right field. It's closer to the dugout. Ha don't have to run so His deference to Henry Asron's preference is a gracious gesture that the 40-year-old slugger deserves for what he has meant to baseball, a gracious gesture that the mystifying management of the Atlanta Braves could learn from. With the abrupt dismissal of Eddie Mathews, the Braves need a manager. Henry Aaron has mentioned repeatedly that he doesn't want to be a manager, with one exception—if he could be the major league's first black manager. He would be if he were to succeed Mathews, but the Braves' management has deigned to ignore not only Henry Asron, but also his brother Tommie, tha manager of their Savannah, Ga, team in the Southern League.

Henry Doesn't Want It

"No, it won't be either of the Aarons," said Eddie Robinson, a Braves' vice-president, in dis-cussing Mathews's successor. "Henry is definitely out and Tommie is involved in a tight pennant race and we think it would be unfair to take him out of Savannah at this time,"

Henry apparently is "definitely out" because he often has ex-pressed how he wants to enter the Braves' front office when he retires after the current season, Moments after Mathews told his players that he had been dismissed following Sunday's sweep the Pittsburgh Pirates of a four-game series, Aaron was asked if he were a candidate. "Not me," Henry said, "That's one damn job I don't want."

But doesn't Henry deserve to be asked? Or is the Braves' management arraid that he might say, "yes," if for no other reason than an obligation to the sociological impact, As for his brother Tommie, once a first baseman with the Braves, the presumption of Robinson in de-ciding, "We think" it would be unfair to promote him is appalling. It's doubtful that Tommie Capra, though, exuded way-out would think it was unfair to be give at making the All-Star team the major leagues' first black baseball executives is that a black should be willing to manage in the minor leagues, which Tommie has done for a few years. But suddenly the Southern League Delmant race is more important to the Braves' management than their major league situation. King Top Candidate Predictably, the Braves' management is expected to select Clyde King as their new manager. Clyde King's credentials include being dismissed as the San Francisco Giants' manager.

Ironically, a demonstration on the absence of black managers and black executives in the major leagues is planned here today outside the Pittsburgh Hilton Hotel before the All-Star Game Inncheon. Most baseball people probably will wonder why it's happen-

Of all the current candidates, Henry Aaron would be accepted as the first black manager easier than any other. Atlanta isn't the ideal location for a black manager but Henry Aaron is more popular there than Clyde King is. Since the drama of tying and breaking Babe Ruth's home run record early this season, he has settled into a .235 batting average with 12 home runs and 38 runs batted in while suffering from an ailing knee. He also is suffering from the adulation that follows him everywhere, as it will to-night in his 23d All-Star Game.

"Henry's mind is on relaxing now," his teammate, Ralph Garr, was saying in the National League locker room yesterday before their afternoon workout. "They have wore him down. He's told me, Ralph, they about wore me to death: I thought it would end when I broke the record but it's worse now.' Henry Aaron is the

But even in the Braves' front office, Henry Aaron would do well to sit with his back to the wall. During the commotion over holding him out of the Braves' lineup so that he might return to Atlanta to break the record, Eddie Mathews took the rap. He took another rap after Sundar's

In England, where Don Revie has exuberantly taken over the national team, we still have the mystery of his great rival, Bill Shankly, Shankly, a voluble, idiosyncratic little Scot, idolized on Merseyside, has announced his resignation as manager of Liverpool. But he is still very actively there, pending the appointment of a successor. Shankly says he weary, and has had enough. Yet, his life is devoted to football, obsessed by football, and those of us who know him wonder what on earth he would do without it.

Meanwhile, Leeds and Liverpool, League and Cup winners, respectively, meet in the Football Association Charity Shield on Aug. 10 at Wembley Stadium, where this annual match has never previously been staged. There'll be no Revie but when Shankly leads Liverpool out, the applause from the supporters of the famous "Kop" will sound more like a passionate plea.

Well, the lady-or, more bkely, the store help—is obviously going to have to put back a lot of groceries. Multiply this quaotity by 20 or 30 million shoppers, and it is clear that there can be severe side effects from a depressioo in which people have no better idea of the value of money than they have now.

With its customary prescience, the government is planning to establish a network of schools to teach Americans what money is. One such experimental school is already operating here in the Georgetown district. Its first class consists of five housewives.

LEADTYE WOLDSES

WASHINGTON.-Alter almost Its teacher, Mr. Goethe, was lecturing the other day on the dollar bill. He began by holding up a dollar bill. "Who knows what this is?" he asked. "I think it's a thousand-dollar hill," said Mrs. Gross. "And how about you. Mrs. Krank?" Goethe asked "What is your guess?"

"I know I've seen something very much like it someplace." Mrs. Krank said, "but I can't remember where. Is it the label from a gin bottle?" "This." sald Goethe, "is a one-dollar bill." One of the women whistied in A woman held up her hand.

"What is it, Mrs. Charpendale?" "Would you show us a twohundred - and - eighty-seven-dol lar-and-forty-mine-cent bill?" "The government doesn't make bills of that particular denomination, Mrs. Chappendale."

"Well, in that case," Mrs.
Chappendale asked, "how can I ever pay for the damage I did to the car driving over here to class today?"

"Quite easily. Mrs. Chappeodale," explained Goethe. "You simply give the repairman 288 of these one-dollar bills, and he will return to you 51 cents io chaone."

"But," Mrs. Chappendale pursued. "according to what you said in yesterday's lecture. I cao't just onake 288 one-dollar bills. Is that right?"

"Quite right." said Goethe, happy at his pupil's aptitude. "Nor may you make dollar bills of any denomination. How then do you get the necessary money?"

Mrs. Chappeodale's face was a study in ignorance. "Who knows how, if Mrs. Chappendale may oot make 238 onedollar bills, she is to get them?" asked Goethe. "I know," cried Mrs. Munk-

"She calls her husband and tells him to make them?" The women all applauded Mrs. Munkhood's ingeouity and despite Goethe's pleas for them to keep their seats, rose happily from their desks and rusbed off to telephone their husbands with instructions to make 288 dollar bills right away.

Mr. Baker is on vacation, This is one of his classics.

-Mary Blume-

'h's a very difficult film because we want in no way to rip off the first one. which is one of the best films I've ever seen.

Frankenheimer's French Connection

PARIS (IET). - The Godfather" will have God knows how many offspring, and here in Paris, at the Boulogne studios, actor-producer Alain Deion is preparing a sequel to his hit film, "Borsaline," while just across the hall is the office of John Frankenheimer who today is casting Arabs and stuntmen for "French Connection II," which will star Gene Hackman and Fernando Rey, just as the first "French Coonection" did.

Frankenheimer is a director of ingenuity and originality whose career in TV ranged from "The Louella Parsons Story" to "Pale Horse, Pale Rider" and "The Last Tycoon," and whose films have taken him from tribal Afghanistan ("The Horsemen") to Monaco greasepits ("Grand Prix"), to prisons tearist ("The Fixer") and modern ("Birdman of Alcatraz"), with polgrant excursions into middle American life ("All Fall Down," "The Gypsy Moths") and into the murky corridors of power ("The Manchurian Candidate," "Seveo Days in

The Reason Why

Why on earth is such a director doing a mere sequel? "I like the script, I like the characters, I like the Hackman character in France and not speaking a word of French." Frankenheimer says. The film is to be shot in Marseilles, "It's a very difficult film because we want in no way to rip off the first one, which is one of the best films I've ever seen. I want to make a movie that stands on its own as a movie.

Another reason Frankenheimer doesn't mind making a sequel to Billy Friedrin's wildly successful "French Connection" is that he doesn't regard "French Connection II as a sequel. Frankenheimer's Vuitton script-holder (Frankenheimer is a Vuitton freak) lies on his desk, purposely empty. He woo't go into plot details for fear of their being pinched by a quickie TV movie and also because he'd just as sooo not risk offending the folks in Marseilles who give out filming permits and who get touchy when it is suggested that drugs have been known to pass through their otherwise untarnished hometown. But his long shooting schedule, which will go into November, suggests there will be nothing simple about the film. The script was written by Robert Dillon and Alex Jacobs. Dillon also wrote "99 and 44/100 % Dead," which Frankenheimer shot in California and Seattle and which has just come out in the United States. "It's a bit off-center." Frankenheimer says. "It's like 1970s pop art, the idea being, quickly, that our society is so violent that the person best qualified to cope with it is the professional killer. "I hope what happens won't be what happened with Seconds and The Manchurian Candidate horrible reviews and then five years later it's on everyone's list.

I don't want that to happen again."

Encouragement

Although critics did not at first like "The Menchurian Candidate," a wild and macabre tale of hrainwashing, one of the first people to urge that the Richard Condon novel be made into a film and to help with the Washington locales was Presiden John F. Kennedy. "He'd read the book and liked it," Frankenheimer says.

Frankenheimer receotly learned from Pierra Salinger that Kennedy had been even more helpful in the making of "Seven Days in May," the story of an American military coup, briefly vacating the White House so Frankenheimer could shoot there. "He wanted that picture made." Frankenbeimer says. "Remember, he was having trouble with the military at that time."

During recent years Frankenheimer lived in France where he learned to become a first class haute cuisine cook. His film work fared less happily, reaching a climax with "The Impossible Object" with Alan Bates and Dominique Sanda, an uncheracteristically personal film that was never properly released because the producers went bankrupt. Frankenheimer's wounds from the experience have not encapsulated. "I think the fact that I'm doing The French Connection' has to do with the fact that that picture wasn't seen," he says. "I want to make pictures that one seesthere's a great big public out there and you have to reach them, otherwise you're not in the movie business."

After "The Impossible Object," Frankenhelmer did a triumphant four-hour film version of Eugene O'Neill's The Iceman Cometh" for Ely Landan's American Plum

"We found the most difficult thing was to cut it. We cut one hour and 20 minutes out of the original, but by the time we'd finished we'd put back an hour. It was a marvelous movie—up to now my hest experience. We were like a repertory company, we never wanted it to end.

"I tried to show Hickey as same and not the way I'd seen him interpreted, as insane. I think you have to live your life without illusions, not with them. Pauline Kael said in her review that you only have to look at photos of O'Neill to see this was a face with no illusions."

Anyone who enjoys Frankenheimer's work must rejoice at the "Iceman's" success, but anyone who has eaten at his table must worry about what his absence from better" he says, "I do a great deal of; cooking in California, the restaurants are

"I'd say, and this is for print, that the Café de Paris at 20th Century-Pox is the worst restaurant in the world. It's absointely toos in my personal guide to bad restaurants, which is the opposite of the Michelin—you make a detour to avoid it. instead of going to it.

"Most restaurants in California are in the guide, but in France you really have to look around to find them." Prankenheimer boasts that he's already found a lulu. "The airport restaurant in Marseil-les!" he says. "That is my best find, leaving out MacDonald's, of course.
